St. Paul's Cemetery History

The history of the Anglican Church in the former Whitby Township begins in 1835 when St. Paul's Church, Columbus, was established by The Reverend Adam Elliott. Surrounding the church was a parish cemetery. The church cemetery, along with a woolen mill, store, school, wooden sidewalks and a boarding house for the workers in the mill were the central part of a village called Empire Mills. (Empire Mills has long since disappeared and only one home nearby was part of that very early village.) Many of the earliest grave stones in St. Paul's Cemetery are those of the pioneer workers in the mill. Most of those persons emigrated from Lancashire and Yorkshire in England.

The first St. Paul's Church was constructed of logs, situated at the corner of what is now known as Columbus and Thornton Roads in Oshawa. This structure was burned in the Upper Canada Rebellion of 1837. A frame building was later erected on the same site and in August 1843 was consecrated by Bishop Strachan. This second building was also destroyed by fire in 1922.

From 1923 and onward to today, St. Paul's has been cared for by the parishioners of St. Thomas Brooklin. Records from the Diocese of Toronto indicate that the cairn and cross were put in place in 1939 to commemorate the early pioneers buried there. In 1968 the south facing Memorial Wall located in front of the patio was installed. In 1970 a large pink granite stone inscribed with the cemetery's name was set in place at the north entrance gate.

Since the year 2000, improvements have included new wrought iron fencing and a modern sign at the west entrance. The Columbarium, blessed in 2006, provides niches for resting places of cremated remains.

A memorial service is held each September to honour those persons buried in St. Paul's Cemetery from the earliest years to the present.

The cemetery is administered and overseen by a board consisting of current members of St. Thomas parish. The board is responsible to the church wardens and to the incumbent minister of this parish.

Cemeteries in Ontario, including St. Paul's, are regulated and licensed by the Bereavement Authority of Ontario (BAO). The BAO is a government delegated authority administering provisions of the Funeral, Burial and Cremation Services Act, 2002 (FBCSA) on behalf of the Ontario Ministry of Government and Consumer Services.

The BAO's free consumer information guide A Guide to Death Care in Ontario — Everything you need to know, is available at: www.thebao.ca
